

CIRCUSTALK REVAMPS NETWORKING IN THE CIRCUS INDUSTRY

New social network will help the international circus world connect and cast

CircusTalk, a professional online social network is here to change how we connect, network, hire and exchange information in the circus industry. CircusTalk provides industry members a professional, circus-specific social network, news and information hub. Now, performers, presenters, companies, directors, agencies, museums, suppliers, festivals, schools, and organizations can connect on a specialized, custom-developed platform and promote their work. If you are a key player in the circus community, then you should be part of this powerful, community-built platform. The more our community contributes and shares, the better resource we will create to make information transparent and accessible in our industry.

"CircusTalk will help the industry to connect, unite, and save time," says Andrea Honis, CircusTalk co-founder, a fifth-generation member of a European circus family. "By working together as a community, we can create a centralized resource center to bond our distinct elements, foster communication, and elevate the industry as a whole."

Registering an account on CircusTalk is free and allows members to access a comprehensive Who'sWho database of artists and companies. In addition, members can post and search jobs and auditions and create pages to promote their acts and shows. CircusTalk's centralized casting resource will connect supply and demand effectively with timely and easily accessible information.

CircusTalk also provides a go-to resource for industry news with its tool called CircusTalk.News. Kim Campbell, editor-in-chief, says "In today's global circus industry, it's essential for artists, directors and programmers to be up to date, to take the pulse of the industry, follow trends, and stay informed of events and breaking news. This is what CircusTalk.News provides to its members." While inviting circus writers and industry experts from all over the world to share their expertise, Kim also conducts interviews with artists and industry influencers, and provides up-to-date original reporting on industry activity from every part of the circus world. It's easy to see how CircusTalk will be the must-have tool for everyone in the worldwide circus family, from traditional to contemporary companies, from performers to producers, from schools to suppliers.
